Although there was an apparent plausibility in the technical reason, which was made the ground for the protest of the Hon. Mr. Ryrie on the minutes of the last Council. it would seem upon more mature consideration, that there was after all; but very little the Administrator decided to reject the expression be was deserving of it. document. The Acting Colonial-Secre TARY urged that rule 15 of the standing form this evening, at 9 p.m.: should have the right to protest against any decision arrived at by the Council, and that, as Mr. Ryrre's protest was not against a decision, it could not be admitted. There is no doubt that it was not a protest against a decision, and consequently no doubt that he could not claim to have it placed upon the minutes in virtue of the privilege accorded by rule 15; but it does not follow that be found that there were half a dozen Chinese hoped that the 247 members of the Club-would The members of the family present consisted of elevations. No sensible school anaster will think conflicts between different civil and criminal a boy a depraved moral character because technicalities of the case preclude any general discussion of the matter. It has been usual in appointing arbitrators by treaty to refer to manner in which the work is to be conducted; and the Institute, in collecting and revising these precedents so as to form a consistent and intelligible body of practice, will do a substanial service. This part of its labours is already far advanced, and will probably be soon published in a complete form. Advancing from this almost professional ground to the higher region of political controversy, the Institute proceeded to consider the "Three Rules" which, it will be remembered, the Governments of England and the United States agreed to present jointly for the acceptance of the Maritima Powers after they had served their purpose in interpretation, bowever, have arisen between our own Foreign Office, and the result has been it would be impossible to submit them to the other Powers without defining their terms with Mr. Fish. It is satisfactory to know that objectionable than now, In rougher times it the international jurists at Geneva are not only of opinion that the rules are deficient in clearness, and should not therefore be pressed upon the other Powers, but sustain the English of the rules. It is not surprising that rules by the four arlatrators at Geneva, and the informal agreement of so many distinguished juriete with Bir Alexan for Cookburn's view be likely to convert bir. Fish. In the meantime, bowever, the suspension of the rules may be regarded as an advantage, especially since boys is now opposed to the best feeling of the FLOGGING IN SCHOOLS. We referred the other day to the subject of An interesting account has been given in the flogging schoolboys, and niged tempers to give up a custom condemned by the spirit of the time. As our observations have excited some remark, and the matter is of great practical moment, we make no apology for reopening the mestion. We, of course, admit the necessity of maintaining strict discipling in school. It is true schoolmasters cometimes mistake the objects of discipline. For instance, they often rate n boy for the results of sheer natural incapacity. We need hardly point out the injustice of such a course. A boy is responsible only for what he can affect by an act of will, and to inflict disgrace on him for what no effort Laveleye. It is not very much that any informal of his can mend weakens rather than forters his mental powers. But there can be no education unless means are taken to check carelessness and inattention. It is idle to expect that children will of themselves take to intellectual work. All the world was reading some time youth; but even be moust sometimes have thought play better than severe tasks. A authority. The members of the Institute of sharp distinction should be drawn, from the International Law are fully sensible of the outset, between what is set as a duty and what is voluntarily undertaken. Most boys delight in cricket, but if ordered by superiors to play nt sertain fixed hours, it may be a question whether the game would retain its churm. Tacitus. Molidierc. Shakespeare, and even Euclid, might majority pressure must always be brought to bear to induce them to get through a certain amount of prescribed labor. The experience is hard for young minds, but one which leaves a wholesome impression. Moreover, it is necessary that in class rooms schoolmasters should be able to secure a certain amount of order.

The conversational talents of boys receive an immense impulse within solsool walls. They find a great deal to say to each other, and say it in a manner felt to be overpoweringly amusing. Their mitchievous propensities, too, are never more active than during moments when they ought to be in be is guilty of small offences in these directions. Nevertheless, wild animal epirits must be conolled, or a vast amount of paius and anxiety will be thrown away. The school is society in miniature. It will never achieve its best if the freedom it enjoys is not based in conformity to reasonable law. While, however, we maintain all this, flogging is not the true means to attain the end in view. The objectious to the continuance to this custom are innumerable. One is its liability to frightful abuse. We are aware that many conscientious men, who think flogging indispensable never allow themselves to go too far in its use. But large numbers cannot be trusted to exercise so dangerous a power. In moments of excitement and passion othey are carried too far; offences in reality triffing are magnified; and serious physical injury is inflicted where, at most, only a slight punishment is deserved. We constantly read of cases in which terrible results follow from chastisement hastily administered; and we may be very aure no one more deeply regrets such dieasters assistants are not permitted to flog, the doubtful duty is, of course, performed with a juster sease of proportion; but even then, it is to be condemned. We maintain that under no circumatances whatever is the infliction of physical shooked no refined sentiment. It was in keeping with a thousand other modes of procedure sanctioned by the public intelligence and feeling It may be noted, however, that even in Queen occasional excesses of schoolmasters. "If a rodde carie the feare of a swords," said Wotton at a famous dinner party in Sir William Cooil's chambers in Windsor Costle, " it is no marville I those that be fearfull of nature chose rather o foreaks the place than to stand alwayss with n the feare of a sworde in a fonde man's handing." The same observation applies, though in a less degree, to the reading of poems.

Our position may seem paradoxical, but it can be established by indisputable steps. Let us begin at the beginning with the extreme of serious literature. The books which are wholly made up of solid instruction, or profess so to be, which are completely free, so far as buman frailty will allow, from any suspicion of art or amusement, are Charles Lamb's class of biblio abibla, books which are no books. The class includes fearly all dictionaries not quite all, for M. Littre, and perhaps a few others, have a way of writing a series of disjointed but ascinating essays disguised in the die tionary form-most encylopedic literature, of course with individual exceptions, and a considerable part of books of reference and scientific treatises generally. Now it may be safely said that no one ever supposed that such books were: meant to be read continuously, that there was any virtue in reading them from beginning to end, or any vice in looking into them to find particular things as wanted. Indeed it is gon. erally admitted that the worker in any special subject on which much literature exists is at a disadvantage if be does not know how to use books of reference properly—that is, if he is not an adept in the art of skipping. This is especially true in the profession which of al others is the most rigorous in requiring accurate knowledge and the least favourable to slovenly habits. Hulf the practical aptitude of a lawyer at any rate of an English lawyer, depends on his being able to use his books discontinuously, so as to pick out the very thing he is in search of, and not waste time on its irrelevant any roundings

But if thus much is conceded, why should the principle of skipping be confined to books which are manifestly and on the face of them not readable? Why is it right to dit from page to page of a dictionary by the help of the alphabetical order, and wrong to travel from one part of a history or a book of travels to another by the help of the index (if the book bappens to be tolerable indexed), rable of contents, or otherwise? We can see no answer to this, so long as the object of reading the book is knowledge and not artistic pleasure. The writer can at most only guess what things it will be convenient to tell; an intelligent reader. must know best what things he wants to be told. It is the same with argumentative writing, essays, and the like. You see by a glance at the first page of half-a-dozen that the whole space is filled with setting forth an argument with which you are quite familiar, to which you will never be converted, or to which you need no conversion; by what manner of duty or reason can you be bound to read the other five pages? It may be answered, Because the style gives a new lustre to old matter. But then you are no longer reading with the single view of information, and the instance is no exception to the first branch of our rule, but a confirmation of the second. It shows, not that it is wrong to skip when you read for learning, but that it is right not to skip when you read for pleasure.

In reading what, may be called literature of exposition, especially in really good essays, it is often difficult to say how much of the general pleasurable impression is due to the aubstance of the author's meaning, and how much to the form. This may be regarded as a kind of neutral ground, where skipping may in some circumstances be allowable and expedient, in others a grave mistake. When we come to Gypsum, 600 piculs, at $1,00, by Chun-loong fiction the case is much plainer. A good work to travelling trader.

VOICES OF THE SEA. BY PAUL MICHEL. To sit by the sea all day and hear its roar, To watch the foam-crowned billows lash the shore Filling the soul with yearnings evermore-

So pleads my throbbing heart. Listen! Sweet voices, calling, float along, Hushing the spirit, soft as liquid song; Wildly beseeching others, prayerful, strong In sorrow's wildered part;

Voices exultant, loving, wayward, glad, Heimful of music, sighing anon and sad As midnight bells, or dreams that, waking, had Lost their sweet hope and died;

Others as chrions sounding, tuneful, loud, Bringing great joy, new greetings from the crowd Of voiceful spirits, and heart's starm is bowed By the for-echoing tide.

Like the aweet singers in a dream of old, Whose changeful meledy a glad tale told, Are these; and, too, as Love's pure, passioned hold They, haunt our deepest sleep.

O pitying sear thou know'st my achier heart Bring back my love-Life long hath borne its smart Blent with thy roar come whisperings, and I start-Ya tides, my secret keep!

AN OLD MAID BADLY FOILED A Phænixville maid, quite old, becoming auxious about her matrimonial chances, recently concocted a plan to deceive a young fellow as to her age. This was the way she tried it: The old family Bible contained a faithful record of all births, marriages, and deaths. This volume the maiden took to her chamber, and selecting her birth page she manage by dint of scratching and writing to change the date of her birth to a period been recorded. Then the Bible was placed the sitting-room table in a conspicuous That evening came along the lover. He soon began to finger with the Bible pages and finally reached the birth record, where and when he discovered to his surprise, that his-Angelina was just one year younger than he. He thought it strange, as she appeared He kept his mouth shut and continued to fumble over the pages. Next be began reading the death list, and made the very astonishing discovery that the radiant maiden, according to the Bible, had actually been born ten years after the decease of herfather. The young man quietly arose and bid Angelina good by, and now swears that Teternal vigilance is indeed the price of liberty."-From the Potteville Miner's Journal

DINING ON THE HAIT. It would be scarcely fair for Englishmen to find fault with the railway restaurants in Germany, seeing that they are much in advance of such institutions in this country. But we might all take a lesson from the French in this respect, for the way of purveying breakfasts and dinners, for instance, at Vescul, on the line from Paris, cannot be too highly extolled. Prosperity to this great innovation, and long life to its founder. How comes it that it has not been imitated, after being in existence so long? Surely there is no lack of patronage on the part of travellers, who thus secure one comfortable meal, at any rate, between Paris and Basic, with plenty of time to eat it in. Three dishes. with dessert and wine, for half-a-crown, is reasonable enough, in all conscience; and the way it is served up is simply perfect. The guard of the train officiates as head waiter, and takes orders an hour before reaching Vescul; be telegraphs instructions, and the meals are found hot and ready for the traveller on his arrival, each dinner being packed in a long cylindrical basket, which makes a capital table in the carriage. The wicker cylinder opens like a rabit-hutch; and dis-

The mere circumstance of having some active employment in a railway carriage is pleasant enough; but when the employment consists in leisurely eating a good dinner in novel pic-nic fashion, the time passes very delightfully indeed. What Underwriting Business pro rata to amount of is a dinner at Greenwich or at Richmond compared to this? How can the views. glorious as they are, compare to the panoramas that here move past in rapid succession? At Richmond, it is true, masses of clustering foliage refresh the eye on ever 1811, and died at the age of 21. His adopted are the big Indiamen moving into dock, huge screw colliers and paddle steamers for ever going steam-launches darting in and out between the sailing craft. But here, in this cosy little dining-room, the scenery is for ever changing, and the eye is quite as much charmed as the palate; for, as you lazily 789, and married to the Grand Duke of munch a savoury pate, or sip a glass of cool Fame claret, there pass before you in succession, Feidan ever-changing peeps of the prettiest country that lies around beautiful Alsace. Some little practice, however, is necessary in eating your dinner in this fashion. Perhaps the best plan to pursue is that of holding the basket firmly between the knees; for besides Little Orphan keeping the table steady, it prevents the on- Massilia currence of any accident which might arise Mongol from your companion mistaking your basket for his own when passing under some of the Oregonian tunnels or bridges; drinking from the wrong
